

Geographia Classica: Or the Application of Ancient Geography to the Classics, for the Use (Classic Reprint)

Greeks and Romans knew only the three divisions of the world Europe, Asia, and Africa. In Europe they had little or rather no acquaintance with the countries north of Germany, now Prussia, Sweden, Denmark and Norway which they called Scandinavia, and thought to consist of a number of islands. East of Germany, and (west) north of the Black Sea, was Sarmatia, now Uman, equally unknown to them. In Asia they knew nothing north of the Caspian Sea, but comprehended all the country under the general name of Scythia, divided into Scythia intra Imaum and Scythia extra Imaum, that is, on either side of Mount Imaus, part of a chain of mountains, the highest point in which was perhaps Himmil in Thibet. Still eastward, we may doubt whether they had a confused notion of Serica, or the north western part of China, as an undefined continuation of Scythia. India they knew as far as the river Ganges, and even mention a nation called Sinas, now part of Cochin China. In Africa they knew little beyond Lat. 10 N. and little perfectly, beyond the immediate coast. (Typographical errors above are due to OCR software and do not occur in the book.)
